

- Institutions

behaviors

WHAT BECOMES “HABIT”

- Institutions aid us in predicting other people’s behaviors, and they create a sense of collectivity: “we’re doing this, and now we’re doing this again — and again and again.”
- Ultimately, behaviors that prove useful to most parties that become habituated and institutionalized.
- With each new generation of actors, the institution gains a history, as well as objectivity: a lived experience that is similar no matter which individual subject is experiencing it at a given time.
- “There we go again” becomes “This is how things are done, period.”

OBJECTIVIZATION

