

SOCIETIES AND INTERACTIONS

- Luhmann divides social systems into two types, based on whether or not they monopolize communications: The first are societies, the second are interactions.
- The differentiation between societies and interactions are heightened in specific historical moments, like the creation of literacy: systems of reading and writing.
- This enabled communication without interaction, as there are more alternatives than face-to-face communication.

SOCIETIES AND INTERACTIONS

