

Structuration

- When agents are engaged in practices they draw on two kinds of resources—authoritative ones (status) and allocative ones (e.g., money).
- An agent's capacity to carry out their practices is influenced by their access to resources (i.e., Bourdieu's ideas about 'skilled' players of the game).
- Thus, established ways of doing things (e.g., institutions) exist, but can be ignored, replaced, or reproduced, either in the same way or completely different.

AFTER TODAY, YOU SHOULD BE ABLE TO EXPLAIN:

