

Structuration

- They are the “rules and resources” that make similar social customs exist across space and time, and thus are organized as systems.
- Rules persist among large groups of people and are lodged in agents’ heads in ‘memory traces’ (similar to Bourdieu’s ideas on socialization and the habitus).

Structuration

