

Calvinism

- particular set of actions for saved citizens tailored his beliefs

create their own spaces

UNSETTLED LIVES

- Swindler demonstrates this by returning to Calvinism. (Recall Weber's argument on the Protestant Work Ethic.)
- John Calvin imagined a particular set of actions for saved citizens, and he thus tailored his beliefs to create those actions.
- Others outside of Geneva came to see the potential in Calvin's theology to create their own spaces, where certain patterns of conduct could be institutionalized (i.e., some as tradition, some as ideology).

SETTLED LIVES

